Current Projects:

1) "Fashioning Empire: Race, Gender and Material Culture, c. 1660-1820". SSHRC funded 2022-2026. How did racial precepts become every-day? How were these concepts spread and manifest through material culture?

This project explores how racial hierarchies were promoted or resisted through the making, maintenance and movement of material culture through British imperial sites, with an Atlantic focus. Fashion, especially dress, strengthened racial precepts; whiteness was materialized through dress and assumed heightened meanings of this era. The politics and practice of laundering and launderers, seamstresses and masquerade balls, sailors' dress and their material proclivities illuminate these processes. Black and White subaltern peoples were integral to these histories. Resistance by the enslaved also took various material forms, while mobile Black servants, women and men, shaped and reshaped facets of fashion and empire.

Forthcoming Work:
