Contributions to Teaching

Courses Taught, by level (* indicates I designed the course and introduced it to the curriculum)

POLS 224	Canadian Government (half-year introductory course, required for majors)
POLS 221	Canadian Political Realities (half-year introductory course for non-majors)
POLS 220	Canadian National Government and Politics (full year course, required for majors)
POLS 350	Politics of Gender (half-year introductory course)
POLS 399 *	Research Design and Methods (third year honors seminar)
POLS 421 *	Media and Politics in Canada (senior undergraduate seminar)
POLS 421/520 *	Gender and Public Policy (senior undergraduate/graduate seminar)
POLS 421/520	Canadian Federalism (senior undergraduate/graduate seminar)
POLS 421/523 *	Canadian Political Parties (senior undergraduate/graduate seminar)
POLS 455/596 *	Gender Politics and Mass Media (senior undergraduate/graduate seminar)
POLS 620	Canadian Politics (Ph.D. core course)
POLS 690	Gender and Politics (Ph.D. core course; team-teaching)

Contributions to Curriculum Development

- In my role as Associate Chair, Undergraduate (1996-2001; 2005-2006) I led the process of revising Political Science core program requirements and Honors program requirements. I designed a new 300-level honors cohort course, in research design and methods, POLS 399.
- Gender and Politics field: designed two new courses: Gender and Public Policy and Gender Politics and Mass Media, and contributed to the creation of the doctoral program in the field.
- Canadian Politics field: designed a media and politics course and developed (with Dr. Steve Patten), two half-year courses (POLS 224 and 225) to replace the full-year introductory Canadian politics course.

Undergraduate and Graduate Student Supervision

Over the course of my career, I have supervised or am currently supervising:

- 27 Political Science honors students
- 22 Master’s students
- 8 Ph.D. students
- 4 recipients of the Roger S. Smith Undergraduate Student Researcher Award, which provides funding for students to conduct a major research project over the summer months.

My supervisees have gone on to become lawyers, civil servants, policy analysts, journalists, newspaper editors, high school teachers, accountants, communication advisors, medical doctors, candidates and elected politicians, post-doctoral fellows and academics.

Contributions to training

Throughout my career I have trained numerous graduate student teaching assistants, whose primary role was to leading seminar discussion groups in the introductory Canadian politics course. Through weekly instructor team meetings, we select topics and readings, design lesson plans, and craft exercises and simulations.

I have contributed to the training of graduate students and colleagues by peer reviewing their teaching, serving as a teaching coach and mentor, and sharing course syllabi, assignments, grading rubrics and even Powerpoint slides. Further, I have included undergraduate and graduate students in the research process as active members of research teams and as co-authors. Through their involvement in research design, data gathering and analysis, and knowledge dissemination, students have gained valuable academic training and skills and received professional development mentoring. I have published with several current and former graduate and undergraduate students.
